

A man with a beard and glasses, wearing large headphones, is focused on his work at a desk. He is using a laptop, and his hands are on the keyboard. The background is a blurred office environment with wooden paneling and large windows. The overall tone is professional and modern.

I n t r o d u c i n g :

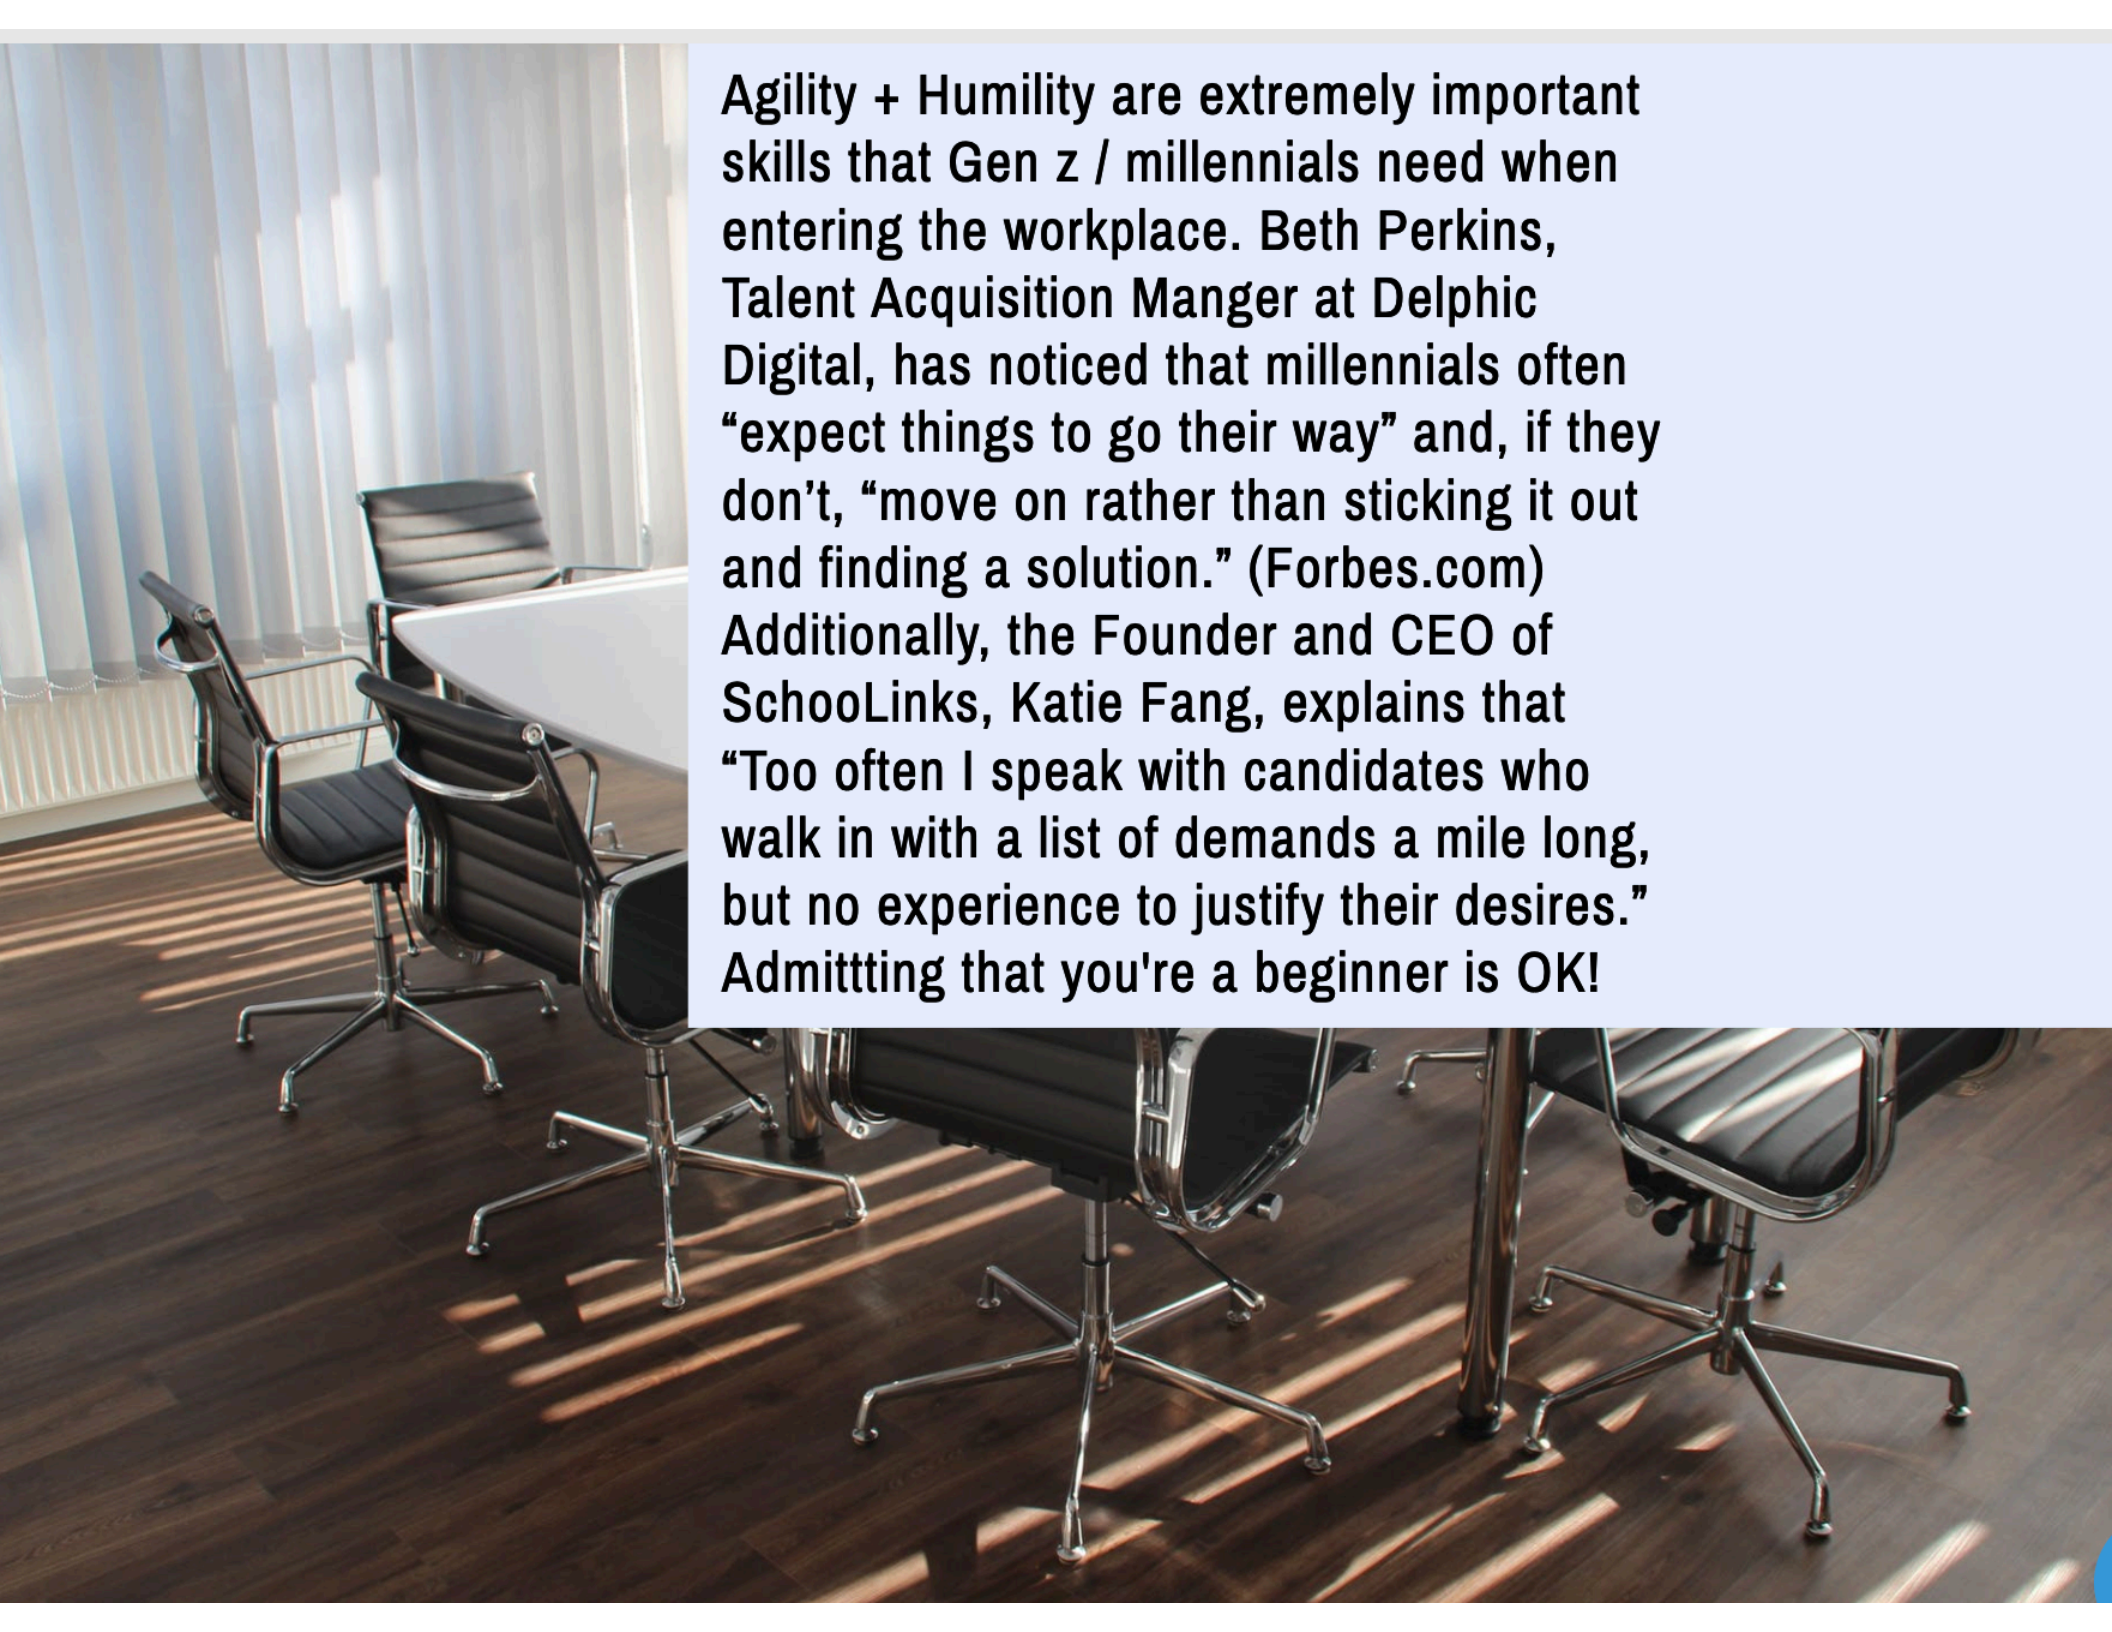

How to Bridge the Generational Gap in the Workplace

College Students: Are you looking for a job in the near future? Check out this post for information you'll need to know before you head into a professional working environment.

The background image shows a top-down view of a desk. On the left is a spiral-bound notebook with lined pages. To its right is a blue and silver ballpoint pen. Further right is a wooden ruler with black markings. The entire scene is softly lit, creating a professional and studious atmosphere.

Employers understand that you've never grown up without Internet...but keeping attention strong at work and staying off your phone for irrelevant reasons is crucial if you want to land the job. "While most millennials will be in assistant roles throughout and for several years after college, they can develop and showcase attention skills by pursuing side projects," says Caroline Beaten, a contributor to Forbes.com.

Agility + Humility are extremely important skills that Gen z / millennials need when entering the workplace. Beth Perkins, Talent Acquisition Manager at Delphic Digital, has noticed that millennials often “expect things to go their way” and, if they don’t, “move on rather than sticking it out and finding a solution.” (Forbes.com) Additionally, the Founder and CEO of SchoolLinks, Katie Fang, explains that “Too often I speak with candidates who walk in with a list of demands a mile long, but no experience to justify their desires.” Admittting that you're a beginner is OK!